

creative
skills
europe

European Platform on Employment and Training
in the Audiovisual and Live Performance sectors

FRUITFUL COOPERATIONS ACCESS TO TRAINING THROUGH SOCIAL DIALOGUE

Examples of social partners' initiatives supporting skills and career development in the European creative sectors

The Creative Skills Europe series

5 focused publications to inspire businesses and professionals from the European creative sectors to engage in training and develop customised solutions for skills development and career management.

- A Step Ahead - Training for Innovation

Good practices from across Europe on skills development supporting the structural transformations of the creative sectors

- A Safe Bet - Training and Workforce Development

A toolbox for the development of HR solutions supporting skills investment in the creative sector

- It is a New World - Training in and for the Digital Era

Examples of successful training schemes and tools for creative professionals in the digital environment

- Joining Forces – Funding our Training Needs

Recommendations for the development of the creative sector training funding schemes

- Fruitful Co-operations – Access to training through Social Dialogue

Examples of social partners' initiatives supporting skills and careers development in the European creative sectors

Publications prepared by Daphne Tepper, Project Director, Creative Skills Europe

Layout: Laurence Dierickx

Published in March 2019

*This project receives support from the European Commission.
This publication reflects the views of the authors only and the Commission cannot be held responsible for any use which may be made of the information contained therein.*

Foreword

Making sure professionals are equipped with the right sets of skills to face current and future challenges is key - both for the survival of businesses and for securing individual careers.

At European and national levels skills development has been given centre stage in public policy strategies with the aim of combatting unemployment and of safeguarding the quality and competitiveness of our economies.

Professional training agendas are however complex fields of action that require the involvement of a variety of stakeholders and a constant awareness of the developments and needs on the ground.

Creative Skills Europe, the European Platform on Employment and Training in the Audiovisual and Live Performance sectors, is a project which aims at collecting information and at developing tools to help the sector adjust its skills to the realities of the field.

Ran by a partnership of European trade unions, employers' organisations, and national skills bodies, Creative Skills Europe built on the intelligence of the sector on its evolutions and needs.

It looked at creating national and European synergies, and at inspiring new types of actions, both at company level and in a collective way at sector level. Its objective was to steer discussions on the evolving skills needs in our sectors and to promote initiatives to respond to those needs.

After a first phase of activities (2014-2016) that led to the identification of key trends impacting skills and competences in our sectors, it was decided to pursue the cooperation from the perspective of the concrete needs emerging from the field.

In 2017-2018 four thematic workshops were organised in different European cities on the topics of innovation, HR management, the digital environment and the role of social dialogue.

During those encounters, available intelligence about our labour markets was shared, qualitative analyses on key trends were studied, and good practices of skills solutions were presented by stakeholders representing education and training bodies, institutions, and industry representatives.

The main outcomes of those exchanges are presented in this publication series.

Access to training: a priority for all

Professional training – initial and ongoing – because of its impact on the development of the cultural and creative sectors, on employment opportunities, and on individual careers - sits at the heart of the preoccupations of social dialogue.

Both employers' and workers' organisations have a vested interest in seeing professionals in the sector acquire the right set of skills at the right time in the course of their work lives.

As the audiovisual and live performance sectors are impacted by globalisation and digitisation, affecting almost all the occupations that compose their workforce, skills development has become a necessity for all types of businesses and organisations.

Access to training is also a key condition for securing individual careers that may know project-based engagements, outside of traditional employment relationships (self-employment, freelancing, etc.).

As the sector is going through transformations, professionals need a capacity to 'reinvent themselves', to move from one occupation to another or to broaden their skills portfolio to adapt to new realities and/or roles, or to earn a living when one occupation is not enough.

As a large proportion of professionals in the cultural and creative sectors tend to change employer numerous times in the course of a career, skills solutions have to be discussed at individual level, at company level and at sector level.

Across the European Union, employers and unions have been given a strategic role in piloting and/or implementing professional training schemes.

Social partners are in general closely associated with vocational education programmes and are key stakeholders when promoting and developing apprenticeships.

In a more limited number of countries, sector-specific bodies (skills councils, training funds, observatories, etc.) have been created. They monitor the developments of the sector, establish ongoing discussions between key stakeholders, and initiate skills solutions that respond to the sector's needs.

They are also privileged meeting places between the industry and education institutions, and important sources of information for the broader public on career perspectives in the creative and cultural industries.

Funded by levies, employers' contributions, training providers and/or public funding, of different sizes and with different aims, depending on the national context, there are very interesting models of sector-level engagement in employment and training discussions and actions.

Skills solutions: inspirations from across Europe

The French model: cross-sectoral legislation and an important engagement of social partners at sector level

In France the system of professional training is rooted in a legislation adopted in the 1970s. The latest reform, put in motion by the adoption of the 'law for the freedom to choose one's professional future' in September 2018, is currently being rolled out. It will bring major changes to the institutional landscape, as well as to the funding mechanisms and their accessibility.

Nearly 32 billion euros are dedicated each year to professional training in France. One of the sources of funding (14,3 billion) comes from a compulsory contribution from the employers (0,55% of the total payroll for companies of less than 11 employees and 1% of the total payroll for bigger companies) and from an apprenticeship tax (0,68% of the total payroll for companies subject to it). In the new system both contributions will be merged into a unique contribution centrally collected by URSSAF (that already collects social security contributions) before being redistributed to a newly created cross-sectoral body (France Compétences) and then to 'Operators of competences' covering each a number of economic sectors.

On top of those compulsory legal contributions, companies also contribute on a voluntary basis with the aim of completing their training plans established each year in line with their needs. They then transfer their contribution to their 'Operator of competences'.

The sector social partners can also conclude agreements that foresee conventional contributions. The objective there is to build shared training plans and to respond to training priorities they will have identified. The State and the Regions also contribute to the funding of professional training.

For the cultural and creative sectors, the sectoral body will continue to be, after the reform, AFDAS (with an enlarged portfolio). AFDAS, piloted by the social partners, has been managing the sector's training rights and schemes for decades. It has been key in promoting the transversal schemes towards the sector, as well as in developing sector-specific tools. The future of some of those tools is still uncertain but the offer of services and of guidance to businesses and professionals will be maintained. Under the new law, the role of social partners in the apprenticeship system will be reinforced.

On a more political front the CPNEF SV and AV (National Joint Committees on Employment and Training for, respectively, the Live Performance and Audiovisual sectors) are in charge of the identification of employment needs and of the evolution of competences, in order to propose solutions and to adapt the offer of initial and continuous training. To achieve those missions, they publish guides to the sectors' occupations, statistical dashboards, prospective studies, etc.

At company-level, organisations of 300 employees or more, have the obligation to engage, at least once every 3 years, in negotiations with unions on the Forward Planning of Employment and Skills (Gestion Prévisionnelle des Emplois et des Compétences - GPEC). The obligation is to negotiate, but not necessarily to reach an agreement. Companies of less than 300 employees can, of course, engage in such negotiations as well, if they wish too.

The objective of a GPEC agreement is to anticipate the socio-economic, technological or organisational evolutions of the company and to adapt the competences of its employees to face those changes. The French public broadcaster, France Télévisions, for example, negotiated and adopted a GPEC agreement. The document presents a cartography of the permanent occupations within the company, a projection of the expected transformations during the period 2017-2020, and then puts forward a strategy to accompany those transformations.

To know more:

<https://www.afdas.com/>

<https://www.cpnefsv.org/>

<http://www.cpnef-av.fr/>

The Belgian model: collective agreements supplemented by public money

In Belgium collective agreements in the live performance, audiovisual and film production sectors foresee the collection of employers' contributions (0,10% of the total payroll) for the employment and training of 'groups at risk'. Those 'groups at risk' are defined broadly and include professionals whose jobs are changing or are impacted by technology, young job seekers, older workers, etc..

Those contributions are managed and redistributed by mediarte.be for the audiovisual and film production sectors in Belgium and by Sociaal Fonds Podiumkunsten for the performing arts and music sector in the Flemish Community. Both organisations are governed by social partners.

In addition to delivering and funding training actions, mediarte.be and Sociaal Fonds Podiumkunsten developed a portfolio of activities (career coaching, on safety and well-being, on diversity, etc.) funded by general schemes, or through specific agreements with public institutions.

To know more:

<https://podiumkunsten.be>

<https://www.mediarte.be>

The British model: industry-led organisations and solid partnerships

In the UK, two organisations focus on the skills needs of the cultural and creative sectors: Creative & Cultural Skills (craft, cultural heritage, design, literature, music, performing arts and visual arts) and ScreenSkills (animation, film, games, television, VFX and immersive technology). Both organisations work closely with employers, trade unions and other stakeholders.

Creative & Cultural Skills gives opportunities to work and learn in the creative industries. An independent charity, it provides careers advice and guidance, promotes apprenticeships, and delivers activities for young people through its National Skills Academy network of industry and education supporters. Since 2008, Creative & Cultural Skills have created over 7,000 Creative Apprenticeships and provided over 5 million people with careers advice.

ScreenSkills provides insight, career development and other opportunities to help grow and sustain the skilled and inclusive workforce of the screen sector.

Its work includes:

- (1) Identifying skills gaps – current and future – across the screen industries and the whole of the country to provide an evidence base for investment in skills;
- (2) Providing careers information;
- (3) Mapping and quality-marking professional pathways to improve entry-level diversity and work readiness;
- (4) Supporting development at every stage of a professional career in screen including through mentoring and offering bursaries.

In addition to support from voluntary industry contributions, it is supported by the BFI awarding National Lottery funds to deliver the BFI's Future Film Skills programme. ScreenSkills also receives funding from Arts Council England to share expertise and best practice from screen to other parts of the creative industries.

Initiatives such as the Theatre Workforce Review and the Workforce Development Strategy of UK Theatre and the Society of London Theatre, or the Digital Learning Centre for Creative Freelancers of the Federation of Entertainment Unions are other good examples of the role and impact employers' and workers' organisations can have in the field of skills needs assessments and professional training.

To know more:

<https://ccskills.org.uk/>

<https://www.screenskills.com/>

<https://uktheatre.org/>

<https://www.feutraining.org/>

Takeaways and the way forward

1. Employers' and workers' organisations are key players for the promotion of professional training

Because of their connection to the field, of their insight into the key trends affecting the sector, and of their capacity to implement and promote skills solutions, employers and workers' organisations are engaged across Europe in professional training actions.

They are asked to feed into initial education curricula, and to be active stakeholders of vocational education programmes. They are invited to take an active role in the development of apprenticeships or traineeships, and to offer opportunities for continuous training to their staff.

2. Initiatives of social partners related to training can be formally recognised by law or negotiated in collective agreements

In some countries, such as France, the role of social partners in skills development and lifelong learning is regulated by a general law that is complemented by agreements negotiated at sector-level.

In other countries, such as Belgium, collective agreements foresee the funding of ongoing training actions through employers' contributions that are then managed and redistributed by skills bodies piloted by social partners.

In the UK, employers from the audiovisual sector contribute to Skills Funds - agreed upon by the industry voluntarily or negotiated at the time of the introduction of a tax relief.

Across the European Union apprenticeship systems are characterised by the involvement of social partners in their governance and implementation.

3. Ad hoc initiatives and partnerships can also cater to specific needs

Outside of formal agreements initiatives developed by employers' and workers' organisations, jointly or separately, to respond to short-term needs can also lead to great impact and be interesting testing grounds for further actions.

At local level, in particular, partnerships are key to establish synergies and mutualise resources.

Co-operation between employers' and workers' organisations can also lead to a better take up of the training offer, to more relevant training actions, and to initiatives that takes into account both the needs of the company and of the individual careers.

4. Co-operation at company-level can also be important to enhance access to training

Discussions between management and workers at company-level on skills development are finally very important to be maintained to make sure:

- (1) individual training rights, when they exist, are respected;
- (2) compulsory training programmes are delivered (such as in the field of health & safety);
- (3) workers are accompanied in the course of their careers;
- (4) and the training needs of the company are acknowledged and catered for.

Such discussions can take place in a more or less formal environment but, whatever format is chosen, co-operations between management and unions will be an essential element to further ingrain training in the audiovisual and live performance sectors, and to offer training opportunities that are both relevant and accessible to professionals in those sectors.

Creative Skills Europe, the European Platform on Employment and Training in the Audiovisual and Live Performance sectors, is a joint project piloted by social partners of the EU Social Dialogue Committees in the Audiovisual and Live Performance Sectors:

- CEPI - European Audiovisual Production Association
- EBU - European Broadcasting Union
- EFJ - European Federation of Journalists
- EURO-MEI - media, entertainment and arts sector of UNI Europa
- FIA - International Federation of Actors
- FIM - International Federation of Musicians
- Pearle* - Live Performance Europe, Performing Arts Employers Associations League Europe

Creative Skills Europe also benefits from the support and expertise of the following national organisations:

- mediarte.be, Fonds Social du Secteur Audiovisuel & Fonds Social de la Production de films / Sociaal Fonds voor de Audiovisuele sector & Fonds voor de filmproductie (Belgium)
- Sociaal Fonds Podiumkunsten (Belgium)
- Commission Paritaire Nationale Emploi Formation Audiovisuel (France)
- Commission Paritaire Nationale Emploi Formation Spectacle Vivant (France)
- GOC, Expert-centre for the creative industries (the Netherlands)
- ScreenSkills (United Kingdom)
- Creative & Cultural Skills (United Kingdom)
- Career and Transfer Service Center of the Berlin University of the Arts (Germany)
- German Theatre Technical Society / Deutsche Theatertechnische Gesellschaft DTHG (Germany)
- Kulturakademin (Sweden)

With financial support from the European Union

European Platform on Employment and Training
in the Audiovisual and Live Performance sectors